Client Case Study

Police Forces meeting accessibility standards

Police Forces as one of many Public Sector organisations have a duty to provide accessible and inclusive communications, including websites, as part of the requirement for reasonable adjustments outlined by The Equality Act (2010).

Recite Me is successfully working with a number of forces to not only make their websites compliant but providing an enhanced online experience for all members of their communities.

Suffolk and Norfolk Police communities are 2 that are currently benefiting from Recite Me.

Providing great software with exceptional service

Receiving feedback on our solution is always welcome. After speaking to a Digital Communications Officer recently at a regional force it was a pleasure to hear our service is matching our software.

Recite Me was implemented after struggling with an existing supplier's software and receiving little interest in trying to resolve it. After coming across Recite Me on another police force website, contact was made and he never looked back.

“Recite Me was far superior to anything I had seen. Martin and his team were great, and implementation was simple. The team really did bend over backwards to support us.”

The aim was to give as many users the best experience as possible, it's not just about colour and font changes, Recite Me also gives minority communities access in their preferred languages.”
